

EX LIBRIS · A JOURNAL OF THE HOUSE LIBRARY

The Reading Room

TWO SHELVES · A QUOTE VAULT · ONE GREEN LAMP

A reading journal built around a tappable bookshelf – every spine opens that book's page, with a vault for copied-out quotes, ledgers for series, a TBR stack, and a wrap up sheet for the year's reckoning.

SHELVES · QUOTES · SERIES · WRAP UP

Before You Shelve

The Reading Room keeps a house library on paper: shelves of tappable spines, a book page behind every slot, a vault of copied-out quotes, series ledgers, a TBR stack, and a wrap up sheet for December. A spine and its book page share one title line – write it once and the shelf stays true.

HOW TO KEEP THE ROOM

1. Claim a spine – open a shelf, tap a slot, and write the book's title into the title line.
2. Keep the book page as you read: dates, rating dots, format, the review, one quote worth keeping.
3. Copy longer passages into the quote vault, one leaf at a time, with book and page noted.
4. Track series in the ledgers; feed the TBR stack from whatever the vault makes you want next.
5. In December, settle the year on the wrap up sheet – counts, the top five, the honest DNF list.

HOUSE RULES

Rate on the night you finish, not a week later. A DNF is data, not a failure – it goes on the wrap up sheet with its reason. The worked example shows the handwriting; your library starts blank.

The Worked Example

One book page filled end to end – Jane Eyre, dated, rated, reviewed, and quoted – plus a quote leaf with two passages copied out, so you can see how the room is meant to be written in.

Everything on this table is marked EXAMPLE. Your live library runs from Your Library.

HOW THE ROOM IS WIRED

Every spine on a shelf is a tap into its book page, and the book's title line is the same field the spine shows – write it once and both agree. Books chain along the shelves, quote leaves chain through the vault, and every page finds its way back here.

THE REVIEW

Re-read after fifteen years, and it holds. What I remembered as a romance is really a book about refusing to be owned – by Rochester, by St John, by hunger.

The red-room still frightens. The proposal under the chestnut tree still lands, even knowing the lightning splits the tree that same night.

Lowood is harder to read now than it was at sixteen.

Verdict: the battered copy stays; it has earned its crease.
